Health officials urge calm

CORONAVIRUS: L.A. County Public Health officials issue a reminder that the virus is not spreading and there is only one confirmed case locally.

LOS ANGELES - The Los Angeles Department of Public Health (Public Health) urges residents and visitors "to get the facts" and take positive steps to reduce their risk of coronavirus.

There is only one case of novel coronavirus in LA County, in a non-resident traveler from Wuhan City, and there has been entire United States and while it is likely that there will be additional cases, actions have been taken to limit the spread of the virus in our country.

Recent travelers who have visited mainland China are screened at the airport and provided with information about restricting their movements, their monitoring health and connecting with their provider and local public health department should they feel ill for 14 days after last being in mainland China.

Guidance has been sent to school districts, universities and colleges explaining the new directives which restrict staff and students who returned from traveling in mainland China after February 2, for 14 days after leaving mainland China.

actions can help identify individuals who may have been exposed to the virus and the Apollo 14 Command and reduce the spread of the virus to others.

Public Health continues to recommend that the public do the following to protect themselves from all respiratory illnesses:

Stay home when you are sick.

Wash your hands often with soap and water for at least 20 seconds, especially after going to the bathroom; before eating; and after blowing your nose, coughing, or sneezing.

Avoid touching your eyes, nose, and mouth with unwashed hands.

Limit close contact, like kissing and sharing cups or utensils, with people who are Clean and disinfect frequently touched objects and surfaces using a regular household cleaning spray or wipe.

Cover your cough or sneeze with a tissue, then throw the tissue in the trash. If you do not have a tissue, use your sleeve (not your hands).

Facemasks are most effective when used appropriately by health care workers and people who are sick.

Get a flu immunization to prevent influenza if you have not done so this season. Neither the California State Public Health Department, nor Los Angeles County Public Health recommend that any normally scheduled events be cancelled due to novel coronavirus. There is no community spread of the novel coronavirus in the Unites States at this time, and the risk to the general public remains low.

DOWNEY - Downey has long been a special place in the world's aerospace history. We are known as the birthplace of the Apollo program, and astronauts came here regularly. Thirtyseven years ago this month, Queen Elizabeth II arrived, with a cavalcade of cars to check out a mock-up of the Space Shuttle Module.

Enterprises of great pith and moment took place in Downey during the great 20th Century Space Race, and North American Aviation "is what put us on the world stage," said many of the speakers at Friday's ceremony.

The old-timers, the retired employees, were being honored at the Columbia Memorial Space Center, a museum that stands on the exact site where these men and women built the modules that carried humans into lunar orbit and lunar landings.

These men and women worked on the various aerospace programs in Downey. Friday wasn't so much about the dazzling array of products manufactured here, but the workers themselves.

"We recognize your work, your love of country and your special skills," said State Sen. Bon Archuleta. "Employees, raise your hands." Some 60 in the audience did.

One of those recovered Apollo command modules hovers permanently beside the Space Center patio, where on Friday Space Center Director Ben Dickow opened the outdoor ceremonies honoring the dedicated retired employees of North American Aviation (through a series of mergers, North American Aviation later became known as North American Rockwell),

The weather cooperated, as if it were a day for a space shot. Under a pale February sky, shiny blue tarps covered two mysterious objects alongside a pocket park located on the entry patio to the museum. A pinkflowering Chinese magnolia and planters with red camellia bushes had been installed next to two concealed special gifts, identity to be revealed later.

An audience made up of the workers who came to Downey in the past, and their families and well-wishers, joined the dignitaries who celebrated their achievements.

Foremost was the sponsor of the day, the Financial Partners Credit Union, an organization that began life as the North

"Special thanks," said Gerald Blackburn of the Aerospace Legacy Foundation, "go to Ed Rusinek, Charles Lowery, and Ed Zadorozny who were responsible for making this all happen."

I sat next to Ron Parrish, a toolmaker who came to Downey during those glory days. He lives in Hawthorne now but in 1972 he and 30,000 others made the commute to fill the acres of parking lots here every day, back when aerospace was king in Southern California, and Downey was the jewel in the crown.

"Sitting right behind us," said Ron, "is Dumont Wing. He worked here for 42 years." I turned and waved. Clever souvenir pens with fins and keychains with a flashlight were placed at the tables inside. And this is where the Downey web of connections showed their unique pattern. I spotted my fellow volunteer worker at the Downey City Library, Elsa Frasier, and sat down with her.

As I left I spoke with Jesse Vargas, a fellow Rotarian and also a board member of Rancho Los Amigos National Rehabilitation Center foundation: one long-Downey institution recognizing another. Jessie and I agreed that the silent star of the event was the recovered command capsule from the first Apollo lunar mission in 1969, now bathed in twilight on the grassy lawn.

Paging Dr. Frischer...

By Dr. Alan Frischer

Two of my three daughters have always loved to sing. In fact, they love it so much that at times it has driven the third a bit nuts! Nonetheless, it brings them joy, and for years now I've drawn enormous pleasure from being a member of a choir with one of them or the other.

Over the years, studies have been conducted focusing on the effects that the act of singing can have on our health. The evidence is overwhelmingly positive. Singing has been found to:

- · help reduce muscle tension
- · improve posture
- · increase lung capacity and encourage us to breathe more deeply
 - · stimulate blood circulation, raising the level of oxygen in the blood stream and therefore the

- clear the sinuses and respiratory pathways
- tone the facial, abdominal and intercostal muscles, as well as the diaphragm
 - · improve sleep
- · release endorphins (the "feel-good" brain chemicals), which help to treat pain
- decrease the levels of the stress hormone cortisol in the bloodstream

Singing can boost confidence.

Stage fright is a common problem; however, receiving praise from family and friends may be the key to eventually overcoming fears. Singing can help with language and broaden communication skills.

Of course, singing is sociable, and can widen our social circle. Participating in a choir or singing karaoke with friends fosters intimacy and creates bonds.

And, note this: the sacculus is a tiny organ in the ear that responds to frequencies created by singing. The sacculus is not thought to have any hearing function and is sensitive to loud volumes, above 90 decibels. The response in the sacculus creates an immediate sense of pleasure!

Singing takes our minds off of our troubles and our worries. It's clear that we should all be singing in the car, the shower, or

Legislation would require rape kits on campuses

DOWNEY - A bill that will ensure availability of rape kits on all University of California (UC), California State University (CSU), and private university campuses across the state will be introduced by Assemblymember Cristina García (D-Bell Gardens).

If passed, UC, CSU, and private university campuses will have access to rape kits either on campus or nearby.

"When my constituent came to me and said a student had drive more than 50 miles to the nearest available rape kit, it made no sense to me,' said Garcia, "My goal with this rape, Garcia said. legislation is to increase access to rape kits for college students to a place where they spend most of their time, where they feel safe, and have regular access to the health center and public safety services.'

Research found that the closest rape kits were as far as an hour away from campus. The long distance from a rape kit impedes access to necessary services the student deserves. Even 10 miles in Los Angeles traffic can be challenging for most students, especially after a traumatic experience such as Finding a ride to a clinic that is at least half an hour or more away guarantees that rapes are underreported. Students can't easily get off campus, so having access to rape kits nearby might help increase rape reporting.

Studies show that one in five women are sexually assaulted during their college careers. Approximately 70% of rapes go unreported and a lack of access to rape kits won't do anything to help increase collection rates or formulated with the help of rape reporting.

This legislation will require urban UC, CSU and private university campuses to have a rape kit accessible within five miles of campus and 10 miles for rural campuses. If there isn't access to free rape kits and full medical care within the five or

"It is unacceptable to expect any victim to travel an hour to then endure three hours of rape kit collection," said Garcia. "While legislation alone won't prevent rape, ensuring victims have the resources they need to go from being a victim to a survivor is important to me and I think we can get there.'

This legislation was constituents. This idea was submitted for the 58th Assembly District's There Ought To Be A Law Contest. Constituents submit their proposals and whomever is selected will travel to Sacramento to participate in the legislative process.

This submission was selected to be one of this year's winners after Garcia heard about the lack of access to rape kits on university campuses statewide.

Planting 1 trillion trees is a start

By Margaret Renkl

After what seemed like 100 years of impeachments hearings, anything uttered on Capitol Hill now sounds to my ear like the voice of Charlie Brown's teacher. Nevertheless, a few words from President Trump's State of the Union address managed to break through the wah-wahs last week: "To protect the environment, days ago, I announced the United States will join the One Trillion Trees Initiative, an ambitious effort to bring together government and the private sector to plant new trees in America and around the world,"

Could it really be true?

You will forgive me for thinking there's no way it could be true. The whole point of the World Economic Forum's One Trillion Trees initiative is to reduce carbon in the environment and slow the rate of climate change by growing and preserving a trillion trees, worldwide, by 2050. But instead of addressing climate change, the Trump administration has rolled back or weakened 95 environmental protections already on the books.

The burning of fossil fuels is the leading cause of climate change, but much of this administration's hostility to environmental protections is a result of its commitment to promoting the fossil fuel industry: allowing drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and other public lands, approving construction of the Dakota Access Pipeline, encouraging more offshore drilling in the Atlantic. The Trump administration has even gutted the popular Endangered Species Act, which was passed with strong bipartisan support at a time in history when the word "bipartisan" was not an oxymoron. Is it any surprise that the Environmental Protection Agency is now widely known among conservationists as the Environmental Destruction Agency?

I'm trying to figure out how this business with trees might be different. Did the president experience a Scrooge-like conversion at the World Economic Forum in Davos last month, with the brilliant Jane Goodall, who supports the One Trillion Trees initiative, playing the role of Marley? If so, it would be a conversion narrative more potent than any since St. Paul was struck down by a blinding light on the road to Damascus. Paul went from persecuting Christians to becoming the faith's most famous evangelist, responsible for the spread of Christianity around the ancient Western world. Donald Trump's conversion to environmental sanity could be the start of

Nothing would give me greater joy than a conversion story in which the Republican Party recognizes and addresses the climate calamity that is already here, but redemption is hardly at hand. More likely: The president has concluded that planting trees will allow him to continue his wrecking-ball policies while simultaneously posing as an environmentalist. Call it an arboreal cap-and-trade arrangement in which there are no caps and virtually no trades — the continued pillaging and polluting of the environment in exchange for planting

For countries whose leaders recognize the dystopia we are headed toward if significant emissions-reducing measures aren't taken immediately, the One Trillion Trees initiative is a brilliant arrow in the quiver of climate-change policy. Leaves absorb carbon, wood sequesters carbon and roots stabilize soil so that the carbon already trapped there stays there. Moreover, some 80 percent of terrestrial biodiversity occurs in forests. Protecting trees is a way of protecting much of what makes life on earth life on earth.

And planting trees is a tangible way to address climate change that can be done on both a micro and a macro scale. Got a sunny spot in your yard? Plant a tree. Got a country where logging or development or agriculture has mowed down whole forests? Plant millions of trees.

Unfortunately, the math is more complicated than that line in the State of the Union address implies. Planting a seedling is better than doing nothing, it's true, but it takes decades for a seedling to replace a tree, and that's if the seedling survives at all: In China's Great Green Wall reforestation program, up to 85 percent of the plantings fail over time, according to Yale Environment 360. For large-scale reforestation to succeed, the right trees have to be planted in the right places — a variety of species, not a monoculture, all native to the ecosystem at hand — and they have to be cared for until the roots are well-enough established to survive the temperature extremes, storms, floods and droughts that are the hallmark of climate change. It can be done, but it can't be done without effort.

Reforestation is a crucial goal, but even more crucial is the other goal of the One Trillion Trees initiative: preserving the trees we already have. So far we're doing a terrible job of it. Here in the United States, we're losing 36 million trees a year in metropolitan areas alone. In Canada, the ancient boreal forest is being mowed down for the sake of toilet tissue. In South America, the rainforest is being burned down for the sake of cheeseburgers.

Here in Nashville, we are losing trees to development at a rate that would take your breath away: 918 acres of canopy from 2008 to 2016, and development has continued unabated since that last census was taken. In my neighborhood alone, just during the past two months, builders clearing three lots have taken down nearly two dozen mature shade trees and more ornamentals than I could keep track of. A beautiful magnolia, a whole stand of towering pines where the neighborhood crows roosted at night, several hackberries that provided food for migratory birds and local species alike. It's possible to save big, old trees during construction, but these developers didn't

Last summer, Nashville passed legislation that requires commercial developers to plant more trees — increasing tree density from 14 to 22 per acre — and offers incentives to preserve "heritage" trees. It's an important first step, but it doesn't impose any penalties on builders who choose not to preserve those heritage trees, and it doesn't apply to single-family homes and duplexes at all. The bulldozers on my street aren't going anywhere until the next round of legislation is negotiated.

I have hope for a next round. "We're not set up to be a very treeminded city," Councilwoman Angie Henderson, the lead sponsor of the new bill (and my former student), told The Tennessean last summer. "I am looking at this as a series of tree-related regulations."

The president of the United States should look at the One Trillion Trees initiative the same way. It's a start. If it stops there, it will accomplish nothing at all.

Why Bernie Sanders praised Amazon

By Jay Carney

"Hello, Jay?" The voice on the line was instantly recognizable.

Given that Senator Sanders is a frequent critic of Amazon, you might think he was calling to complain about something my company had done — or wasn't doing. But on this day, in November 2018, his message was different.

"Listen," he told me, "I just want to congratulate Amazon for raising your minimum wage to $15 an hour. That's good for your workers. It's the right thing to do. Please thank Jeff Bezos for me."

To be sure, Senator Sanders's appreciation for Amazon and our founder, Mr. Bezos, didn't last long. He and Senator Elizabeth Warren, both candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination, regularly attack the company on the campaign trail, other candidates sometimes echo them. Still, his call at least recognized a reality often forgotten or ignored in debates about the role a company like ours can and should play in the economy.

This year's elections will center, as they almost always do, on the economy — specifically, on jobs and how things like health care and training opportunities affect the way American workers feel about their economic circumstances. As the employer that has added more jobs to the American economy over the last decade than any other, we at Amazon have a unique perspective.

Critics and reporters often categorize Amazon as a big tech company, and it is true that digital technology powers much of our businesses. But in today's economy, phrases like "big tech" and the "tech industry" obscure more than they enlighten. Our core business, consumer retail, involves hundreds of thousands of employees who store, ship and deliver billions of physical goods — not bits of data via airplanes, trucks and vans around the world. We are not a social media company, a news aggregator or a forum for political advocacy (or disinformation).

While we fully agree that a company of Amazon's size should be scrutinized, we also believe people should know that Amazon is doing exactly what many lawmakers and critics insist the private sector should do. And because Amazon is a large company with hundreds best software engineers, computer science Ph.D.s and data scientists.

of thousands of employees, as well as contractual relationships with That means offering generous health care and other benefits on top hundreds of thousands of other businesses of all sizes, what we do can generate positive ripple effects across the country.

When Amazon raised its minimum wage to $15 an hour, we made sure that every one of the company's warehouse workers, known as fulfillment center associates, got a pay increase. But the change wasn't just good for our associates. We have 500,000 employees in 40 states; when a company our size increases wages, competitors feel pressure to do the same for their own workers, or risk losing them. Indeed, after our wage-increase announcement, we received a record 848,775 applications for hourly positions.

We know $15 is not a lot. In fact, we believe $15 should be the minimum anyone in the United States is paid for an hour of labor, and in most areas of the country our starting wage is even higher. But while the debate about Amazon's impact at times focuses on how our hourly jobs compare to jobs of the past, or to an idealized vision of the future, the truth is that more than 40 million Americans earn less than the lowest-paid Amazon associate. For many people, a job at one of our fulfillment centers is by far the best option available in their region. And we are proud of that — even as we agree that our political and business leaders must work together to create more and better options for all America's workers.

One place to start: Raise the federal minimum wage to $15 from its current rate of $7.25 — something only members of Congress like Senator Sanders can do. If Congress were to follow our lead, all it would take to greatly improve the lives of America's lowest-paid workers is the president's signature.

In keeping with what political leaders say they want to see from economy since 2010. In economically struggling areas like Fall River, Mass., and the Inland Empire in California, our recent investments and hiring have helped to drive down the local unemployment rate and added hundreds of millions of dollars to local economies.

Improving the lives of American workers is about more than wages. We compete fiercely with Silicon Valley companies to hire the of highly competitive pay. To cut costs, we could follow the model of some other companies by giving cheaper, basic benefits to our hourly work force. Instead, we not only pay our hourly workers significantly better than most of our consumer retail competitors, we also provide the same comprehensive health insurance and parental leave benefits to our lowest-paid associates as we do our most senior

While the United States may never restore the manufacturing sector to its 20th-century heights, we can train Americans for the high-paying jobs of tomorrow. With that goal, Amazon offers fulfillment center workers the chance to learn new skills and earn certificates in high-demand fields that offer better-paying job opportunities.

Our Career Choice program prepays up to 95 percent of tuition and fees — making it almost free for employees to learn new skills. In most cases, associates who finish Career Choice become eligible for jobs that double or triple their current pay — either within Amazon or, if they prefer, with another employer. Overall, Amazon is investing $700 million to provide training to 100,000 of our domestic employees by 2025. Once again, the scale of Amazon's investment in its own work force will influence other major companies to follow

All big institutions, public and private, merit scrutiny. At Amazon, we welcome it — from lawmakers, regulators and customers. And we know that our critics will at times have good ideas about how we, and other major companies, can do both more and better.

But we also hope that, in examining what we already do, those companies, Amazon has plowed $270 billion into the domestic critics at least acknowledge this: When it comes to creating jobs, raising wages, providing benefits and training employees for higherpaying jobs, Amazon is doing many good things — for the economy, and for American workers.

Why are you still packing your kids' lunch?

Parents today face a steady stream of advice about how best to care for their children. Mothers, in particular, are pressured to be the perfect parent: Most of the advice on social media and parenting blogs is directed at them.

How to feed the kids gets a lot of the attention. Sending children off to school carrying a healthy, made-from-scratch lunch is one of the ways that (mostly) mothers are encouraged to protect their children from the harmful effects of the industrialized food system.

Middle- and upper-middle-class women especially are encouraged to pack lunches made from pricey local organic and fair-trade ingredients — these women are assumed to have financial resources and time to make healthy lunches every morning.

It rarely gets said outright, but the subtext is clear: Don't let the lunch lady feed your child.

For many parents, school cafeterias invoke memories of subgrade hamburger meat, soggy tater tots, and grilled cheese sandwiches that taste like warmed-up cardboard.

But in recent years, while some parents have been focusing on creating Instagram-friendly packed lunches, the quality of schoolcafeteria food has improved significantly. The passage of the Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act in 2010 was a major step forward, requiring schools to serve lunches made with more whole grains, a wider variety of fresh fruits and vegetables, less salt and less trans fat, while creating opportunities for schools to serve free meals to all students.

Yet the progress K-12 schools have made toward serving healthier and more appetizing lunches may stall unless more middle- and upper-middle-class parents can be persuaded to let their kids buy lunch at school. Without greater participation from children paying for lunch, local school districts will lack the funds to maintain the gains in

In fact, if we could muster the political will, increasing the financial and public support for subsidized lunches would secure a future for healthy school food that would improve public health, create better jobs for school cafeteria workers (some 90 percent of whom are women) and help the country transition to a more sustainable food system.

Ninety-five percent of public schools participate in the governmentsubsidized National School Lunch Program, which was created in 1946 to improve children's health and support American farmers. On a typical school day, roughly 30 million children, mostly from lowerincome households, eat lunch through this program, which sorts students into different payment categories, depending on their family

Children from a family of four that earns more than $47,638 per year pay full price, while lower-income families pay either 40 cents per lunch or nothing at all. The average cost for a full-price elementary school lunch is about $2.50, but local districts set their own prices. Some high school lunches, with prices as high as $5 per lunch, exceed the limits of affordability for many families.

Putting healthier food on school cafeteria menus has done little to change school lunch participation rates: By my calculation, roughly 20 million eligible children, mostly from middle- and upper-middle-class families, continue to opt out of the national program by bringing lunch or by buying special à la carte food items not covered by the program.

As an individual family decision, packing lunches might seem like the best option, especially for children with special dietary needs. But when millions of families do so, their actions reduce the political will and financial resources necessary to make public school lunches better

The Trump administration isn't much help. According to Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue, providing schools with the flexibility to plan menus that appeal to students' taste preferences is a way to attract more paying customers to the federal program and reduce food waste. Mr. Purdue has pursued this strategy for making school lunch "great

In practice, this has meant enacting policies that loosen restrictions on the amount of sodium, flavored milk and refined grains that can be served in school meals. The department's own data shows that participation in the national lunch program is higher in cafeterias that serve healthier meals, yet the administration's latest proposal, released last month, would allow schools to serve more french fries and fewer green vegetables.

Despite these setbacks, in recent years, community activists have won universal free school meals in many of the nation's poorest schools and in some large districts like Boston and New York City public schools. Many more districts have started robust farm-to-school programs that support local food and farm economies. And Democrats are talking about universal free lunch on the campaign trail.

There are limits, however, to what even the most progressive school food service programs can achieve when roughly 40 percent of eligible students continue to opt out of the national program.

The food-service director of the Austin Independent School District, Anneliese Tanner, told a local news outlet that the district could afford to serve grass-fed beef if the kids who currently opt out of the national program would eat school lunch just once a week.

All families stand to benefit from making a public investment in high-quality, universal free school meals. Mothers, in particular, would benefit far more than we might realize: According to the American Time Use Survey, women spend more than twice as much time per day preparing family meals as men. Preparing school lunches cuts into their already limited leisure time and adds to the mental load they disproportionately shoulder.

The solution is right in front of us. When kids eat school lunch, they and their parents are supporting the efforts to improve the national program for current and future generations.

The history of Valentine's Day

Valentine's Day occurs every February 14. Across the United States and in other places around the world, candy, flowers and gifts are exchanged between loved ones, all in the name of St. Valentine. But who is this mysterious saint and where did these traditions come from? Find out about the history of Valentine's Day, from the ancient Roman ritual of Lupercalia that welcomed spring to the card-giving customs of Victorian England.

The Legend of St. Valentine

The history of Valentine's Day-and the story of its patron saint-is shrouded in mystery. We do know that February has long been celebrated as a month of romance, and that St. Valentine's Day, as we know it today, contains vestiges of both Christian and ancient Roman tradition. But who was Saint Valentine, and how did he become associated with this ancient rite?

The Catholic Church recognizes at least three different saints named Valentine or Valentinus, all of whom were martyred. One legend contends that Valentine was a priest who served during the third century in Rome. When Emperor Claudius II decided that single men made better soldiers than those with wives and families, he outlawed marriage for young men. Valentine, realizing the injustice of the decree, defied Claudius and continued to perform marriages for young lovers in secret. When Valentine's actions were discovered, Claudius ordered that he be put to death. Still others insist that it was Saint Valentine of Terni, a bishop, who was the true namesake of the holiday. He, too, was beheaded by Claudius II outside Rome.

Other stories suggest that Valentine may have been killed for attempting to help Christians escape harsh Roman prisons, where they were often beaten and tortured. According to one legend, an imprisoned Valentine actually sent the first "valentine" greeting himself after he fell in love with a young girl-possibly his jailor's daughter-who visited him during his confinement. Before his death, it is alleged that he wrote her a letter signed "From your Valentine," an expression that is still in use today. Although the truth behind the Valentine legends is murky, the stories all emphasize his appeal as a sympathetic, heroic and-most importantly romantic figure. By the Middle Ages, perhaps thanks to this reputation, Valentine would become one of the most popular saints in England and France.

Origins of Valentine's Day: A Pagan Festival in February

While some believe that Valentine's Day is celebrated in the middle of February to commemorate the anniversary of Valentine's death or burialwhich probably occurred around A.D. 270-others claim that the Christian church may have decided to place St. Valentine's feast day in the middle of February in an effort to "Christianize" the pagan celebration of Lupercalia. Celebrated at the ides of February, or February 15, Lupercalia was a fertility festival dedicated to Faunus, the Roman god of agriculture, as well as to the Roman founders Romulus and Remus.

To begin the festival, members of the Luperci, an order of Roman priests, would gather at a sacred cave where the infants Romulus and Remus, the founders of Rome, were believed to have been cared for by a shewolf or lupa. The priests would sacrifice a goat, for fertility, and a dog, for purification. They would then strip the goat's hide into strips, dip them into the sacrificial blood and take to the streets, gently slapping both women and crop fields with the goat hide. Far from being fearful, Roman women welcomed the touch of the hides because it was believed to make them more fertile in the coming year. Later in the day, according to legend, all the young women in the city would place their names in a big urn. The city's bachelors would each choose a name and become paired for the year with his chosen woman. These matches often ended in marriage.

Valentine's Day: A Day of Romance

Lupercalia survived the initial rise of Christianity but was outlawed—as it was deemed "un-Christian"-at the end of the 5th century, when Pope Gelasius declared February 14 St. Valentine's Day. It was not until much later, however, that the day became definitively associated with love. During the Middle Ages, it was commonly believed in France and England that February 14 was the beginning of birds' mating season, which added to the idea that the middle of Valentine's Day should be a day for romance. The English poet Geoffrey Chaucer was the first to record St. Valentine's Day as a day of romantic celebration in his 1375 poem "Parliament of Foules," writing, ""For this was sent on Seynt Valentyne's day / Whan every foul cometh ther to choose his mate."

Valentine greetings were popular as far back as the Middle Ages, though written Valentine's didn't begin to appear until after 1400. The oldest known valentine still in existence today was a poem written in 1415 by Charles, Duke of Orleans, to his wife while he was imprisoned in the Tower of London following his capture at the Battle of Agincourt. (The greeting is now part of the manuscript collection of the British Library in London, England.) Several years later, it is believed that King Henry V hired a writer named John Lydgate to compose a valentine note to Catherine of Valois.

Typical Valentine's Day Greetings

In addition to the United States, Valentine's Day is celebrated in Canada, Mexico, the United Kingdom, France and Australia. In Great Britain, Valentine's Day began to be popularly celebrated around the 17th century. By the middle of the 18th, it was common for friends and lovers of all social classes to exchange small tokens of affection or handwritten notes, and by 1900 printed cards began to replace written letters due to improvements in printing technology. Ready-made cards were an easy way for people to express their emotions in a time when direct expression of one's feelings was discouraged. Cheaper postage rates also contributed to an increase in the popularity of sending Valentine's Day greetings.

Americans probably began exchanging handmade valentines in the early 1700s. In the 1840s, Esther A. Howland began selling the first mass-produced valentines in America. Howland, known as the "Mother of the Valentine," made elaborate creations with real lace, ribbons and colorful pictures known as "scrap." Today, according to the Greeting Card Association, an estimated 145 million Valentine's Day cards are sent each year, making Valentine's Day the second largest card-sending holiday of the year (more cards are sent at Christmas). Women purchase approximately 85 percent of all

How to marry spending styles as a couple

In love as in life, money can be a source of stress and strife. But while financial fights may seem inevitable, they're usually just a sign of differing views and styles among couples.

"Everybody approaches spending and money differently, but if you're serious about each other it's time to get serious about your money," said Michael Sullivan, a personal financial consultant with Take Charge America, a national nonprofit credit counseling and debt management agency. "Couples who recognize and understand each other's money differences while working together toward common goals can find financial bliss."

Sullivan shares five ways for couples to get on the same page with money:

Talk about money: You can't win with money together unless you talk about money together. Discuss your different styles and philosophies toward spending, saving and investing, and open up about income, debts, obligations and assets. It may be difficult but talking to your partner about money is the first step toward winning with money.

#CoupleGoals: Nothing brings people together like shared goals. As a couple, decide what you want your money to do for you. Get out of debt? Save for a home? A new car? Go on a tropical vacation? Set money goals that fire you up and motivate you to work together to reach them. Set a budget together: Creating and sticking to a budget is at the heart of financial success — especially for couples. Determine how expenses will be split up and track each one for 30 days. Use what you learn to adjust and allot how much should go in each budget line, keeping your goals in mind.

Create spending rules: It can be helpful to create spending rules or limits that allow each partner to spend up to a certain amount without consulting the other. It can be a blanket spending ceiling like $100 or $250, or you can set limits or ranges for specific day-to-day expenses like $8-$12 for lunch or $25-$50 for new clothes.

Build an emergency fund: Nothing derails a welldesigned financial plan like an unexpected expense. An emergency fund acts as a buffer between you and credit card debt, creating reserves solely for emergencies such as car repairs or medical expenses. When you have money to handle an emergency, it helps keep stress at bay. We recommend saving six to nine months of expenses as an emergency fund.

Mayor's Corner

A busy spring and summer awaits Downey

By Blanca Pacheco Mayor of Downey

Happy New Year Downey!

Being on the City Council has truly been a rewarding experience and I am looking forward to serving as your Mayor. I want to thank everyone who attended my swearing-in ceremony in December and to outgoing Mayor Rick Rodriguez for his service. I definitely have big shoes to fill.

It is my pleasure to be selected by my council colleagues to serve as the Mayor for 2020, and I want to thank you for having the confidence in me. This is an exciting time for Downey, as it has been well over a decade since we've had a female Mayor and this is the first time Downey has had a Latina Mayor.

Also, equally as monumental is that this will be the first time that we've had two females serving as Mayor and Mayor Pro Tem in Downey. I am looking forward to serving with Mayor Pro Tem Claudia M. Frometa and making it a historic year.

Hillcrest Festival of Fine Arts is returning for its 60th year

LA HABRA HEIGHTS - For one weekend a year, Hillcrest Congregational Church transforms into an art lover's paradise filled with paintings, sculptures, fine art crafts and other terrific artwork.

This year, the church will host its 60th Hillcrest Festival of Fine Arts diamond anniversary, on Feb. 21-23, with the participation of 17 of its most successful past featured artists.

Some of the participating artists include Annette

Atwood, Armando Baeza, Kelly Bracamontes, Gerald Brommer, Nancy Enkoji, Brad Faegre, Sandra Grassi Nelipovich, Bill Haskell, Suzette Hodnett, Candace J. Metzger, Miss Mindy, Joel Nakamura, Yoshio C. Nakamura, Jon Oakes, Ernest Lacy, LeRoy Schmaltz and Adrian Van Suchtelen.

To celebrate this 60th anniversary, international artist Joel Nakamura has created an original piece of art titled "God Geometer" depicting a diamond radiating light in a cosmic planet surface, looking into the future, a good sign for more celebrations to come.

The church's main exhibit gallery hall will feature many impressive pieces of fine art that spotlights the uses of many mediums such as watercolor, ceramics, photography, jewelry, acrylic, bronze and mixed media, just to name a few. The event will feature a Children's Art Studio as well, giving younger artists the opportunity to showcase their ability. In addition to the fine art pieces, the festival will be featuring music during the festivities on multiple stages located throughout the premises.

Artist Roberto Chávez, who also served as the event's chairman, has successfully led the Fine Art Festival for the past decade. According to Chávez, producing the yearly event takes a team effort.

"A whole lot of work is involved," said Chávez, "It's all volunteer work, and I cannot take all the credit for myself, lots of great artists, church members including Rev. Paul Clay and community leaders, assist every year on putting it all together, some of them are my mentors who have paved the road for me to take on this amazing task every year.'

Cerritos Library rated 5 stars by national journal

CERRITOS -- Cerritos Library has attained a five-star rating in the "Library Journal's" national rating of public libraries, the LJ Index of Public Library Service.

The LJ Index rates United States public libraries based on selected per capita output measures, including total circulation, circulation of electronic materials, library visits, program attendance, Wi-Fi sessions and public internet computer use.

The 2019 LJ Index derives from data recently released by the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS) for Fiscal Year 2016-2017. This year, 6,333 United States public libraries qualified to be rated in the Index. In this edition, there are 261 Star Libraries, each receiving three-Star, four-Star, or five-Star designations.

The top libraries in each category, organized by ranges of operating expenditures, were then assigned five, four, or three stars. Only three libraries in California earned five star status throughout all expenditure range categories.

Cerritos Mayor Naresh Solanki said: "The City of Cerritos is honored by the Cerritos Library's five-star rating from the 'Library Journal.' The top rating is a testament to our community's interest in pursuing lifelong learning through exceptionally high use of the library's services.

Cerritos Library is located at 18025 Bloomfield Avenue, Cerritos. The library is open 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Monday through Friday; 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday; and 1 to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

presentation to focus on hydroelectric plant

DOWNEY - Local historian Nicholas Curry will present a program on the Big Creek Hydroelectric project at the Thursday, Feb. 27, meeting of the Downey Historical Society.

The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m. at the Barbara J. Riley Center.

Located on the upper San Joaquin River system in the Sierra Nevada of Central California, the Big Creek Hydroelectric project was engineered by John S. Eastwood and initially funded by Henry Huntington's Pacific Light and Power Company.

Its primary purpose was to supply power for the growing city postseason play. Paramount (9-1) will host Aliso Niguel in the of Los Angeles.Construction started in 1911 and the first power transmitted to Los Angeles was in 1913.

Southern California Edison acquired PL&P in 1917, and was expanded to its present size with the last powerhouse to come online Edison still owns and operates the system which was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 2016.

Things you didn't know about Downey: John Buckles

Contributor

In reading the Downey Historical Society newsletter of June 1975, there was a great story about Mr. John Buckles, who was well known in Downey as a respected contractor and real estate developer.

He developed the residential area north of what was North American Aviation and then, at that time, Vultee. I think he also built the Bank of America building in Downey.

"His most notable monuments remaining are the three large homes," the newsletter read. "The oldest is the colonia home of Judge Rives on Paramount Boulevard at 3rd Street.'

The following comments were written by Mr. J. Henry Burke of Pico Rivera, giving a sketch of John Buckles who contributed much to the development of Downey:

In 1919, he built the largest of the three for Mr. Al Ball and that is now on what is known as Cherokee Drive, about two blocks west of Lakewood. This beautiful home was built on a very secluded road amongst the beautiful orange groves.

In 1922, he constructed the home in which I live on Passons Boulevard in Pico Rivera. This home represents the dream of my mother, Mary E. Burke, and is in part patterned after a house we occupied in the Wilshire District for a year or so. As you know, my father, Osburn Burke, was the son of Joseph Hartley Burke. April 22 was the 110th anniversary of Joseph Harley Burke's purchase of deed No. 1 to Downey, according to Thompson and West.

Our home is the only one which has been continually occupied by the building family. The quality of JOhn Buckle's work is evident by the fact that even 50 years later, much of it is in perfect condition.

In our community these homes are remarkable for their quality and they are monuments to the skills of the cabinet makers and artisans who built them. In some respects, they are on the interior much as fine furniture and are, of course, of a very different quality from what we see in our homes. Bobbi Bruce is a docent with the Downey Historical Society.

Route 91 shooting survivor is keynote at Norwalk prayer breakfast

Deputy Lori Kammer was one of over 400 individuals shot in 2017's deadly Las Vegas tragedy

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

NORWALK Norwalk held it's 50th annual Mayor's Prayer Breakfast on Wednesday, spotlighting one of the survivors of the deadly 2017 Las Vegas shooting.

This year's theme - "Love 20,000 people." is the Bridge Towards Healing; Lead the Path" - featured a heavy emphasis on public safety officers, including Norwalk Sherriff's officers and other community servants at nearly every table.

Margarita described the event as an "inspiring part of your day."

"Now more than ever, we need to be open to and strive towards the possibility of a brighter future, not simply for ourselves, but also for our neighbors and our community," said Rios. "This event has reflected our tradition of being a connected community, and continues to motivate and to support each other."

The morning's Keynote was Deputy Lori Kammer, one of the victims of the Route 91 Harvest Festival tragedy that saw 58 killed and over 400 wounded by gunfire, and hundreds of others injured in the ensuing panic.

Kammer spent most of her speech recalling that fateful day, saying that she remembered it "like it was yesterday."

"It started out to be a great evening, celebrating my friend's birthday...just having a great ol' time," said Krammer. "Then about 20 minutes later into listening to [James Aldean], a gunman opened fire from a nearby hotel on a crowd of

Once the bullets stopped flying, it became obvious that Kammer's injuries were severe, and she required urgent medical attention.

It was over a year and a half along with several surgeries, a stint in the ICU and an extended hospital stay - before she was able to return to duty.

After concluding her story, Kammer spoke of the support she received as she recovered.

"When I finally made it home, my immediate family and friends, my department family, and the Norwalk community came together to help and support my recovery, said Kammer. "Their continued prayers and well wishes helped me every step of the way during my recovery.

"The love and support I've received is so overwhelming; it truly has restored my faith and helped me get through a difficult time. I know I couldn't be where I am if it wasn't for the amazing support and love I have received. strength to heal.'
